A photograph of a man and a woman standing on the deck of a white boat with a green hull. They are looking at each other and smiling. The boat is on a body of blue water under a clear blue sky. The title 'HIS & HERS' is overlaid on the image in large, yellow, serif font. The ampersand is a light blue color and is larger than the other letters.

The sun deck, or "Jeanne deck," offers the best vantage point for sipping martinis and taking in the busy harbor.

A wall of honey onyx defines the galley, featuring Miele appliances, including a drawer microwave for safety on the rocky seas.

He's a little Art Deco. He's overly cautious. Together, Jeanne and Doug Jackson of Collins Island in Newport Beach bring equilibrium to an 80-foot vessel, christened the Tortuga, that's stylish enough to feel like home and practical enough to cross the ocean.

On the safety and functional side of the design equation is Doug. "Things go wrong and you want to be prepared," says the retired airline pilot, who customized a "dive locker" off the swim step for scuba fanatics.

He considered the worst-case scenarios. In a clutch, the Tortuga can reach a cruising rate of 8 to 8.5 knots with only one of the twin 475-horsepower engines, but the fully customized Nordhavn 76 typically runs on both. As for the two barbecue grills, he only needs one at a time, but, if the propane runs out, the other one is electric.

That left Jeanne, president of Nike's direct-to-consumer division and member of the McDonald's Corp.'s board of directors, to handle the aesthetics.

To suit her tastes, she applied an Art Deco influence using ebony, onyx, and marble throughout the three-level interior, including three staterooms, five heads, galley, salon, and casual eating area. Sue Capelli of Passione Interior Design in Irvine added the finishing pizzazz.

Where Jeanne envisioned brown granite for the galley countertops, "Sue found the leathered granite that was just that much prettier." Capelli also added a playful punch of sporty stripes on the upper sundeck's beige terry cloth cushions.

Two years ago during a trip to Capri, the Jacksons rented a boat with an oversized lounging pad on the sun deck that inspired the Tortuga's comfy perch, now dubbed the "Jeanne deck" because that's where she sips martinis while enjoying the view.

For their entire 25-year marriage, the Jacksons have been collecting ideas for their dream boat. In 2007, they began working with Nordhavn Yachts in Dana Point to custom design the Tortuga, which was built in Taiwan and arrived in Orange County in December 2009.

While Jeanne spends her weekdays at Nike headquarters near Portland, Ore., Doug takes the "big, slow, steady green boat," as he calls the Tortuga, on test voyages. Jeanne joins him on weekends at their home in Newport Beach or at Doug's current locale, wherever that might be.

With a journey to Cabo San Lucas already complete, longer voyages to Hawaii or the San Juan Islands are on their radar. The timing couldn't be better. Their daughter, 22-year-old Lindsay, works for Burberry in London, and 19-year-old son Craig attends Southern Methodist University in Dallas. With an empty nest and a sizeable boat they can operate without a crew, the Jacksons are ready to make themselves at home wherever they go.

Ebony trims the walls and ceilings throughout the interior as seen in the salon and formal dining room.

The master stateroom includes a king-sized bed draped in silk with inviting window seats on either side.
